Holistic Treatment Collaboratives Yoga & Massage Practice

Peaceful Connections through Yoga Learn the Keys to Your Own Growth and Awareness

Hello my name is Mehen Erboe. I am a licensed Social Worker (LSW) and a yoga therapist. I currently work at the Richmond VA Medical Center in the Mental Health department. I received a 200 Hrs. yoga certificate from the Integral Yoga Academy in Yogaville, VA in 2010. Integral Yoga is a gentle practice that can be used as a daily wellness practice. My focus has been to create gentle yoga practices for individuals and groups that combine gentle physical poses with breath awareness and end with Yoga Nidra or deep relaxation to foster a mind/body connection. I have worked with persons with mental health diagnosis as well as physical ailments to help people find a practice to encourage self-healing. I enjoy teaching yoga as a means of mind/body/healing and using its techniques in my professional career as a social worker to help alleviate symptoms from anxiety, depression, PTSD, and chronic pain.

My goal is to spread the healing aspects of yoga to teach everyone the skills they need to maintain physical and emotional wellness.

I am currently working on a certification as a Yoga Therapist through Phoenix Rising Yoga Therapy. A Phoenix Rising Yoga therapy session can be a great compliment to regular psychotherapy or stand-alone session by bringing your body into therapy. During the session, we will use techniques from yoga including gentle postures, breath, props, and light touch as well as open dialogue to begin to build an awareness of your mind -body connection. When the mind, body, and spirit are connected we can create positive desirable change in our life.

As a Phoenix Rising Practitioner-in Training, I am offering up to 3 free sessions to anyone interested in participating in a Phoenix Rising Yoga Therapy Session. These sessions are free in return for feedback. I am also asking if some would allow me to video tape sessions, but this is not necessary to participate. Your information will be kept strictly confidential and shared only with my mentor as I complete the Phoenix Rising Yoga Therapy Program.

To schedule a session and learn more, you can contact me directly at:

SHAWNTE' PETERSON, LMT, MBA, MPH TALKS ABOUT SELF-CARE FOR THE MASSAGE THERAPIST

Shawnte' Peterson is a Massage Practitioner, Massage Therapy Educator with a background in Kinesiology, Business and Health Education. Shante' has been practicing massage for 17 years and currently teaching massage at a local college and teaches advanced modality courses to Licensed Massage Therapist. Shawnte' will share self-care information during the yoga workshop.

Massage Therapist are for the most part are gentle beings; however, our work often leads to repetitive postures, forceful pressure and lifting clients body parts that could then lead to injury or ailments. We encourage our students and staff to care for themselves and take the advice we give to our clientele and take moments to focus on ourselves. This means spending time listening to our bodies, nurturing our body with nutrients that keep us energized. We need to move and keep our muscles and joints healthy not only because our jobs are labor intensive, but because to give positive healthy energy and give our best selves to others we should feel our best every day. But this doesn't only apply to my profession this can be translated to any profession, those of us that work behind a desk day to day, healthcare workers, care providers, professional drivers and more, repetitive injury has no limitations in who it may affect listening our bodies requires self-awareness and taking moments to care for our bodies to avoid injury, loss of work and income which can certainly be stressful.

Self-care includes stretching, self-massage, nutrition, detoxing, receiving full body massage and bodywork, exercise, flexibility routines such as yoga, and meditation.

We embrace this idea and we introduce these concepts to our Massage Therapy students at Centura Chesapeake through nutrition course and although these are not on our curriculum we have a talented staff that can share their experiences with yoga, stretching, meditation, and Qigong.

The American Massage Therapy Association describes self-care in a multitude of ways such to ensure career longevity, a way to balance work-life demands, techniques to keep your hands and wrists healthy and the benefits of being mindful in your practice by worker smarter not harder through body awareness*. Massage Therapist can find tips like these useful in everyday life and in their practice of Massage and to avoid burn out and injury.
